Meet Jerry Jones, M.D.

My name is Jerry Jones, and I am a board-certified anesthesiologist in private practice for eleven years. I became interested in continuous peripheral nerve blocks (CPNB) several years ago as I saw increased attention given to this emerging field of anesthesia practice. In 2007, I ventured into this exciting new field. After seeing dramatic outcome differences and hearing overwhelming responses from my patients, surgeons and administrators, I became passionate about expanding the role of ultrasound-guided regional anesthesia in my practice and developing a successful CPNB Program in my hospital.

Since that time, I have developed two successful CPNB Programs from the ground up (and contributed to countless others), lectured extensively around the country and trained numerous individuals in real world private practice. I am now replicating my success through consulting and partnering with leading companies in the industry to deliver more cost-effective care and to improve patient outcomes. If you are interested in propelling your group forward, I would like to spread this success to your facility as well.

"I am a board-certified anesthesiologist and was lucky enough to be a part of the first block program set up by Dr. Jerry Jones...Jerry was an excellent teacher, and I've never met anyone with more enthusiasm for this. Having been in practice for 22 years, it is sometimes hard to stay abreast of newer techniques and procedures. It's also easy to remain rooted to familiar ways of doing things and Jerry ran into a lot of "teaching old dogs new tricks". For me, though, it brought me back to one of the main reasons I chose anesthesia in the first place, which was my love for doing things with my hands...Our practice is in a suburban area and we now are getting patients from other areas including the city because of our willingness to do these blocks."

"The work Dr. Jones has done with continuous nerve blocks has been explosive! I try to get them for my patients whenever possible."
